

Primary school France Prešeren Črenšovci
April 19 and 20, 2024
Organizes an International Professional Conference

School Autonomy in Developing a Sustainable Relationship with Nature and (Fellow) Human Beings

Sustainable coexistence is a prerequisite for the survival of current and future generations, and education plays a crucial role in training young generations to achieve sustainable development goals and create a better world for the future.

The goals of the European Competence Framework for Sustainability GreenComp (2022) also promote a sustainable way of thinking among students by developing knowledge, skills and relationships for responsible action.

Education for sustainable development is not solely focused on environmental education but holistically connects environmental, economic and social issues. It involves the relationship between humans and nature, as well as relationships among people, interdependence of people in different parts of the world. In this year's international professional conference, we aim to highlight innovative pedagogical approaches that embody the goals of sustainable development: raising students' awareness of climate change and the use of clean energy; developing intergenerational responsibility, values of dignity and justice for all people; striving for non-violence, a safe and inclusive learning environment, etc.

Within these current topics, we seek solutions at the international professional conference. Numerous successful practices at home and abroad can enrich us and provide new knowledge for further research and finding appropriate approaches that will enable optimal work and progress for students and professionals alike.

The conference is intended for all professionals in kindergartens, primary schools, secondary schools, universities, and other institutions involved in education.

More information about the schedule and registration for the international professional conference can be found on the school's website: <http://www.osfpcrensovci.si>.
